Abstract. This paper examines the role of policy networks in driving education reform across countries. Education systems globally are increasingly interlinked, with policy networks facilitating the exchange of ideas and best practices. The study focuses on the mechanisms and effectiveness of these networks in fostering educational innovation and reform. By analyzing case studies from diverse educational contexts, it reveals how transnational networks can influence national education policies. The findings highlight the potential and limitations of policy networks in achieving cohesive and effective education reforms worldwide.

Keywords: education, reform, policy, networks, transnational

Introduction: Education reform is a global imperative, with policy networks playing a pivotal role in facilitating international collaboration and innovation. This paper analyzes the influence of transnational policy networks on education reform, highlighting their role in disseminating best practices and fostering collaboration across borders. Through case studies of various educational contexts, the study evaluates the effectiveness of these networks in shaping national education policies. The research aims to understand the dynamics of policy networks in promoting cohesive and impactful education reforms globally, providing insights into their potential and challenges.
